Woodham, Robert
(also as Woodam)

Robert Woodham (also listed as Woodam) served as a private in the 6th Maryland Regiment of Militia during the American Revolutionary War for Independence.

He enlisted on 17 Feb., 1777 and was killed in action against the British on 16 Aug., 1780.

Robert's widow, Mrs. Sarah Mantts (Mantz ?) was issued a pension on 12 Sept., 1792. She received a grant of 100 acres, federal land warrant # 11,852.

Her assignee for the land warrant was John Wright.

American Revolutionary War for Independence

Edward Woodham, Junior

Edward Woodham, Junior served in the American Revolutionary War for Independence [1775-1783]. He served in both the North Carolina Militia and in the federal Continental Army.

When the war began, the thirteen Colonies were part of the British Empire and ruled by the English Crown. Within a short time, each of the Colonies declared themselves to be independent republics or commonwealths. Each of the Colonies remained independent nations until they came together several years later and ratified the United States Constitution, giving up their national independence to form a single united nation.

Each of the Colonies already had their own Colonial Militias when the war broke out. These were citizen armies made up of most able-bodied men who were called up in time of emergencies. They had little actual military training and even less combat experience. They had to provide their own arms and often their own munitions as well. These were mostly primitive muskets and flintlocks. After they declared their independence, these volunteer military units became State or Commonwealth Militias. Each new State had their own army and several had their own Navy.

In North Carolina and many other states, each county had at least one militia company. In most southern states, it was a rule of thumb that an area must have enough men of age to form a regiment (usually four companies) in order to found a new county. Dobbs County, where Edward Jr. lived, had a full regiment. The Dobbs County Regiment of Militia was initially commanded by a neighbor of the Woodham family, Colonel Richard Caswell. Caswell later became the first American Governor of the newly independent Republic of North Carolina. He also became a General of the North Carolina State Militia and then in the federal Continental Army. Caswell was an attorney and large plantation owner. He prepared the will (now lost) and filed the probate for the estate of John Woodham in 1766.

Edward Woodham, Junior was born about 1746 in Prince George County, Virginia. His father, Edward Woodham Senior, moved soon afterward to the Tar River in what was then Granville County and later became part of Edgecombe County. Sometime in the 1750's, the family settled in that part of Johnston County which later became part of Dobbs County. The area then became part of Glasgow County, which later split into Lenoir County and Greene County. The Woodhams lived in the Falling Creek Community, near the present Institute Community and LaGrange, in modern Lenoir County.

Very few records were written on the militia companies of North Carolina, simply because of the extreme scarcity of paper. The source of paper from Europe was almost totally cut off by the British after the war began. Many of the records which were written later became lost or destroyed. These were county or State records and those which have survived to the present are owned by the North Carolina state government and preserved in the North Carolina State Archives at Raleigh.

Edward Jr. was probably a member of the Dobbs County Regiment of Militia before fighting started. When the American Revolutionary War began in 1775, Edward Jr. became a living participant in one of the world's most dramatic periods. It was an event which shook the very foundations of society throughout the world. American independence and the new laws they established changed the way people think about their governments.

Never before in the history of mankind had people enjoyed such freedoms as those Americans gained for themselves.

Two pay receipts, dated 22 Feb., 1777 and 25 April, 1781, show Edward Woodham Junior served on active duty as a soldier during the war. These pay receipts are preserved at the State Archives. They show Edward Jr. was paid for military service in the State Militia. The 1777 pay receipt shows the paymaster was Richard Caswell. He was a neighbor and apparently friend of the Woodham family. Caswell became the first Governor of the new State of North Carolina after the colony declared independence. He also became a general in the American Army during the Revolutionary War.

One of the few remaining muster rolls for the Dobbs County Regiment is from the late 1770's which includes both Edward Woodham Jr. and his father, Edward Woodham Sr. Edward Sr. is listed among those who were "Too old or infirm" for active military duty.

In 1781, Edward Jr. became one of the few men to serve in the Continental Army, the new "national" army of the united thirteen states, commanded by General George Washington. It is not known how long he served in the Continental Army nor in what military campaigns he participated in.

"A Discriptive List of the men raised in the Dobbs Regt. of Militia to serve Twelve months in the Continental service agree-
-able to an Act of the General Assembly passed at Halifax
February 1781"

A list of men from the Dobbs County Regiment of North Carolina Militia who enlisted in the Continental Army

The Continental Army was a federal army under the control of the Continental Congress.

The commander-in-chief of the Continental Army was General George Washington.

Each of the former English colonies declared themselves to be independent republics or commonwealths. Each of them already had their own colonial militias when they became independent and these then became the new State Militias. The majority of men who fought in the war were members of the state's militias.

A Descriptive List of men raised from the Bucks County Regiment of Militia to serve together on the in the Continental service agree-

FREDRICK      WOODHAM

Frederick (Fredrick) Woodham served in the Dobbs County Regiment of North Carolina Militia during the Revolutionary War for Independence.

A pay receipt is preserved by the State of North Carolina the North Carolina State Archives in Raleigh which shows he Fredrick Woodham was paid one pound "for ... (active ?) duty..."

The receipt is dated ...Sept., 1781.

The remainder of the receipt cannot be read because of faded ink and a hole which was punched into all pay receipts once they were paid as proof of payment.

War of 1812

Georgia

Woodham, James

The War of 1812 (1812-1814) between the United States and Great Britain (England) was in the South, primarily a war against the Indian allies of the British who were trying to reconquer their former colonies. In the frontier of Georgia, the Creek Indian Nation still occupied south Georgia, from the coast around Brunswick, west to what is now Mississippi and north to the Cherokee Indian Nation, which then began where metropolitan Atlanta is today.

The Creek Indian Nation sided with the British against the Americans. The Georgia Militia was called up on numerous occasions to fight the marauding Indians. The Indians were supplied with guns, munition and other supplies by the British in Florida, which was then part of Spain.

James Woodham enlisted in the 2nd Regiment (or 3rd Regiment) of Georgia Volunteers and Militia, under Colonel Jenkins during the War.

James was a resident of Greene County, Georgia and the son of Edward Woodham, a native of Virginia who moved to Greene County during the 1780's.

The record of his service is preserved by the Georgia State Archives in Atlanta.
